Naturally he was afraid to make himself the mark of an action, and so took refuge in the demand for a Parliamentary select committee to investigate. He declined warmly to be asked to appear before such a committee, as he could not get such a committee this year, and he would take steps to obtain one as soon as Parliament met again. This roused Mr. Barington, and he said: "If now which the Minister had."

declined, on any premises whatsoever, to sit under the cover of Parliamentary privilege, and to formulate his charge in the light of open day. He positively refused to appear before the Royal Commission, or, in any way, to accept any form of inquiry except by a select committee of the House. The Attorney-General, when replying, made both of the foars expressed by Mr. Selvey. He said that the law already gave a witness in a Royal Commission the same protection as was before the supreme Court. Further, the Government had offered to protect Mr. Sokey in any way, so that the member might give his vote freely, feeling that he was entitled to the measure of protection which any honest member of the country could receive.

no law or Government can, as Mr. W. wanted, protect anyone who goes before a jury and commits wilful perjury. By way of contrast to Mr. Want's calm and lucid speech, Mr. Hoyle relied on vehemence, declared his intention of siding with Jealous Mr. Schey. The debate which followed dealt largely with the question of the law and other points of a technical character, but, for the most part, being calm and logical in their tone. In the course of his remarks three remarks, Mr. Sehey demanded received from the Government another so that he would be indemnified all costs and expenses incurred in any civil action which might be brought against him. The matter was allowed to drop half-past 9, and then, as soon as an opportunity, the Minister for Works announced the names of the gentlemen who had been selected for the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Works. The members chosen were as follows:

Mease, Wall, Gough, Torpy, Neill, M'Court, Collins, and Gowan. The list was read over in briefness and if any members were disappointed, I do not express their feelings openly. The government business remaining on the paper was disposed of. The Marriages Validation bill was read a third time, and returned, in its amended condition, to the Legislative Council. The members were then asked to consider the members of a new standing order, designed as phrasesology of this new standing order was settled in committee, and the Government, thus completed all its available work, left

In the absence of the promoter's bill Mr. Caruthers moved the consideration of the Council's amendments. Much laughter, it was pointed out that the bill really created a new bill, all the amendments having been struck out and new ones inserted. Mr. Barton explained that the bill, as it ed, was not a measure of legal amalgamation, but simply enlisted solicitors to appear in court as barristers. As Mr. Barton said of this privilege being granted to barristers, he did not offer any opposition to such-amended measure. The committee, on the same motion, treated the matter and soon agreed to the new clauses proposed by the Council. Mr. Neill's Infants Bill stood next on the list, and here important amendments made by the Council be agreed to. The committee adopted course without hesitation, and so Neild got his bill through in minutes. Mr. Goodwin was equally fortunate in the Arbitration Bill, after which a stoppage came upon that perpetual source of contention, Broken Hill water supply. Mr. Neild, in charge of the second measure designed to supply water to this thirsty town, asked the members to agree to the amendments proposed by the Council, assuring members that ponents of the scheme were really lost, and would commence work as legislative sanction had been obtained. Mr. Neuk, who was in charge of the rival and abandoned Broken Hill Water Supply Bill, moved to the bill generally, and moved that the committee disagree with the amendments made by himself. Mr. Neuk, wishing to save his vote, agreed to reduce the quantity of land to be sold to the company to the smallest possible amount.

to committee by Mr. Con, who indicated of the bill. He proposed to define, in accordance with a desire expressed on a previous occasion, the streets along which tramways be made. Mr. Conn, however, had decided without his best. His action with regard to the previous bill had aroused Mr. antagonism, and trouble loomed ahead. Mr. Chamber for Paddington said to see a plan for a new tramway, and was accommodated with a map of Broken Hill, on of which he suggested to make nothing. "If you the plan on the floor you will about it," said Mr. Cann. But he refused to go down on his hands and study maps, and contented himself with the clause under discussion. The subject, as it always does, the Site socialists, good deal of opposition was offered, with the apparently, of forcing the construction of tramways upon the Government. Mr. Cann was in despair over his huckle measure, and was no longer at last, consented to adjourn.

However, when prog was re-series of questions appeared in several acts for black labour in the colonies, but particularly upon the attitude that Government should assume in regard to Sir Samuel's proposal to reintroduce kanak labour on land under the contract system. Mr. while admitting his inability to fully the questions, expressed the hope that he be able to do so before the session close.

POLICE PROTECTION of SYDNEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.
Sir,—The "Larrikin" is ever with us. He makes us feel his hideous presence in the most inconceivable forms, he is becoming a portion of our everyday life, from the rising of the sun until the going down thereof, and thence until it rises again; he is apparently master of the situation, and is to every outward seeming inclined to show us that he is aware of his power. How that power has been obtained, how it is to be used, and how it is to be shared, his shoulders fitted to bear the burden more to the public advantage, will be shown in this article. For years past this incubus has been gradually settling upon us. We have been told to "go to the Mount Carmel, and Woollomooloo horrors, as they are amongst the first evidences that human beings were amongst us with the instincts of savages, and the power of intelligence to do as they please, and to assist them to commit them with impunity. Since those days—that is, during the past 10 years—the danger has been fast increasing, but the antidote appears to have been altogether lost sight of. city should be tolerated by those to whom we have entrusted the repression of crime, seems to be almost incredible, and can only be accounted for by the supposition that we as a community are as far behind other big centres of civilisation in intelligence, as we are in front of them in crime. It is not true that this city is in a state of subjection, or submission, to it, to a small minority of its inhabitants, must be a fact patent to all who read the papers, or whose business takes them into the streets at night; and that the means of coping with the evil are either deficient in strength, or are not properly applied, must also go without saying. I do not purpose in this notice to discuss the question of the propriety of course. We are all too familiar with them. What most concerns us now is—having the plague amongst us, how can we stamp it out? Dangerous diseases require drastic remedies. The popular feeling is that the remedy for the larrikin, which is most certain to effect a sure cure, must be applied by means of the public floggor. I sympathize with the feeling, and I thought I would express the public feeling in this respect, but "first catch your hare." By the present constitution of the Police Force of this city it appears to be almost impossible that the peace and good order of the law-abiding inhabitants can be maintained by the law. I have before me the last official report

From an inspection of the 1892 and 1893 annual reports of the New South Wales Police Force, it was found that the strength of the force in the months up to the 31st December, 1891, by which date I find that the total strength of the New South Wales Police Force at that date was all ranks 1865. Of this total 1194 are constables (rank and file), and 14 are detectives, leaving a margin of 457 officers, or nearly one-fourth of the total force. Of these 457 officers, 100 are stationed at the 10 "head stations" in Sydney and its immediate suburbs, and numbered from one to five, a total of 410 men, always taking the rank and file only. These men are distributed as follows:—No. 1 station (the Central), 67; No. 2 (Christ Church, George-street, 701; No. 3 (Ashington), 81; No. 4 (Lower George-street), 46; No. 5 (Newcastle), 124. It is considered that the total 775 men are scattered, with their proportion of officers, all over the colony; and I do not propose to traverse their distribution. Out of this total of 419 men it will be observed that No. 5 station, Newtown, claims 124, of which 17, exclusive of officers, are water police. No. 7 station, where is water in the tank, is the largest. It covers all the north side of the harbour, commencing at Manly Beach, extending through North Sydney and Willoughby; it crosses the Parramatta River about Lane Cove, and embraces all the western suburbs right across to Hurselville and as far west as Mimbush. Thus it will be seen that the total available working force in the western part of the county is 419, and this is further reduced by 24, leaving a balance of 395 constables for the whole of the eastern suburbs, the city proper, Balmain, Pymont, and all the suburbs lying east of the Illawarra line and extending down to Botany Bay. To these we may now add 93 officers of various grades up to senior-sergeants, giving us a grand total working force for the densely-populated inner suburbs of 488. The constabulary force in itself would seem to be a very strong body, and so it would be if available. Unfortunately, however, it is not all available at ounce. The inconvertible law of nature steps in, and says that these men want rest. The regulations have very properly fixed eight hours as the time to be on duty, and consequently 24 hours as the time to be off duty. As a total, all ranks on duty at a given time of not quite 130 men. Again, we must allow a percentage absent on leave and sick, and so we reduce the total to, say, 125. Of these, again, there are 22 on special duty at Government House and the public offices, and so we bring ourselves to see that a population of about 100 men, who are the metropolitan police, is provided out of the public purse with one policeman to 3870 of population.

Is it then any wonder that, a premium being offered to crime, crime should accept the offer? Is there any reason to doubt that comparative immunity from punishment is the result? And this immunity is brought about in two ways: first, by attribution of blame to causes. We have only to glance back at the murder of Anderson, in Lower George-street, to know that not only is a terrorism exercised over the victims of assaults and robberies, but a like condition is established in the minds of those who, if conscious that the law was strong enough to protect them, are nevertheless deterred, by the necessity, to help the law to conduct its duties, but who, knowing full well that under present conditions their own lives would not be safe, wisely —almost selfishly—hold their peace. This, then, is the amount of police protection afforded us, and it would be as well to glance, in passing, at the administration of this force. I am not a student of uniformed men. One smart man who did not tell every person that he was a policeman would do more for the prevention and detection of crime than the uniformed machines; and I hold that the prevention of crime is of very much more public utility than its detection. If the criminal classes knew that any man standing near them was likely to be as efficient as the police, they would not do as much of the fearful things they do. If the police were dressed in the same way as the civilians, there would be very much fewer street outrages committed. The police department appear to be slowly awakening to this fact, and by-and-bye we may hope to see at least one-third of the force picked not for brawn but brains, and allowed to dispense with the criminal's friend—the police uniform.

There is much more ornamental display and a paucity of real working men. Of course, discipline must be maintained, and so there must be controlling power, but four men to one officer seems to be an undue proportion—too much like a poor penny-worth of bread.

Inside one of the suburban courts the other day and witnessed an example of this. There were not more than 20 cases to be heard, all of minor importance, such as bad language, drunkenness, &c. To conduct this business there were present a sub-inspector, a sergeant, two senior-constables, and four constables. It struck me then that this display was a sheer waste of power, and that at least two-thirds of those men had no business to be there. As to the public advantage in looking after the public safety outside. A few days ago a report was made at the office of the Inspector-General of a violent and savage assault on a citizen. Full details were given, but it was found needless to detail three plain-clothes constables to visit this gentleman's home to make inquiry. Surely one was sufficient, and it was not sufficient to his honor.

Has it never occurred to him that, being as he is admittedly short of men, the force he has should be made the most of? Is it required, for instance, that constables should be stationed at the Public Library, museums, Board of Health Offices, Buildings and Colonial Secretary's Offices? The Landings are 20 miles long. Looked at from the latter from an official point of view, I take this to be an insult to the respectable portion of the public and a wanton waste of power. At all the buildings named there is a staff of attendants. If these were made special constables any emergency could be met by them—they are always on the spot. The use of constables in this manner is a waste of money and a source of irritation.

Let us glance at the figures referring to some of our suburbs. Take Balmain—population last census 23,478, police force total 18. Allowing one-third of these to be on duty at any given time, it gives an average of one policeman to 2013 of population, and that population of 1,326, total police force 13. Cleanest population, 1,326, total police force 13. The results we know. Redfern and Darlingstone—population 24,798, police force 23, including one sub-inspector. Woolloomooloo, significantly enough, is not tabulated in the Inspector-General's report. Probably a police force is not required in that district. A very large amount of work is covered by the police in the execution of duty, which should never be taken to them—collecting the electoral roll for instance. This could and would be very much better done—at any rate in the big centre of population—by private tender, or if that were deemed inadvisable, by the officers of the Government Submarine. I do not know what circumstances suggested it, but I am certain that it was the work of the police. It is a thing entirely done by them, and it costs nothing. It is in a top-heavy and needless fashion. Vagrant dogs, sheep, goats, etc., instead of being made the care of the police should be handed over to the tender mercies of municipal officers. Not a month ago I saw two policemen (aggregate weight, say, 250 lb.) arrest a stray dog, and, after some time, and it took them time to get it at least half an hour of the public time, to get it out of sight of me. Whether he was looked up or not I do not know. I directed the attention of some neighbours to the circumstance, and the remark was made that while those men were so occupied murder might be committed in this same block. It is unreasonable to say that a man who is not ubiquitous can be a vigilante. Sir Boyle Roche's bird, cannot be in more than one place at once. But it is not unreasonable to expect that duties should be removed from the hands of the police of a nature such as those quoted, and that they should be thereby given better opportunity to fulfill their mission, always a dangerous and unpleasant one, of repressing crime and maintaining order. Cases of far-reaching influence would be reduced to the harridan. Having got him here, our business is to, if possible, exterminate him. To do this we must show him that there is alongside him a power that is greater than he. At present that power is to a great extent nullified, and he laughs at it. Prove to him that crime means swift and certain punishment and the evil will cure itself rapidly. It is foolish to play with wild beasts—and we are simply doing so now, and encouraging them to fresh efforts in their savage ways.

I am, &c., WILL. H. STERLING.
